BACHELOR, AGAIN.

A BRIGHT REJOINDER TO BENEDICT'S ARTICLE.

Men Qualified for Matrimony-Word to Favor of the Flirt-Marriage and Celibacy Incidental to Happiness.

Now that another knight has touched Sir Benedict's shield I might well leave him to fight it out with Delta but his later lectures have been so severe, so illogically severe (if he will pardon me for saying so). that I can't let him go without one more

I attack his consistency. He depicts mar-I attack his consistency. He depicts mar-riage in alluring colors; he asserts a deep-pity for the bachelor; he denounces cele-bacy almost as a social crime and threat-ens it with the maiediction of Heaven. And yet in glancing over his articles one is convinced that all unconsciously, of course, Benedict is at bottom either an enemy to the cause he professes to champion, or else is a monarchist and believes in the divine view of kines!

enough—i.e., that all men ought to marry, but when we examine into the exceptions he makes to the rule we find that he reduces the marriageable class to very limited proportions, mankind generally falling under one or the other exceptions: In one of his earlier articles he shuts out from the Elysian Fields of Marimony not less than nine-tenths of the citizens of Virginia, for after advertising the many attractions of wedded life and extorting bachelors to come to the altar, he concludes with the cruelly restrictive qalification (I do not quote his exact words) that every son of Adam ought to marry if he is financially able to do so. And while Benedict does not state in definite figures what he regards as the proper financial prerequisite, yet we can glean from the airy way in which he elsewhere deals in money values that nothing less than Godfrey in an hour and a quarter in San Francisco for $2,000. In 1889 Godfrey fought another draw with Joe Lannon, and beat Jack Wannop, the English pugilist, Jack Ashton, and Ed. Smith. prerequisite, yet we can glean from the airy way in which he elsewhere deals in money values that nothing less than $10,000 a year would bring a man into the golden circle of his general law. I recall how in emphatic condemnation of the Virginia staple he has declared he would

Virginia staple he has declared he would not smoke a pipe for $5,000.

Again, he admits there are other classes who can claim exemption—those who have mothers and sisters dependent on them for support: this class he will find to be a large one in war-wasted Virginia—those who devote themselves to the good of humanty in religion, and I may add in science and in art, and he concludes his list of exempts from his social-duty service by releasing those poor fellows whom

"The light that lies in woman's eyes "The light that lies in woman's eyes Has led to their undoing."

Has led to their mandang.

How many of the latter class there may be in proportion to the population I have no guide for conjecturing. I have heard, however, that there are some in Richmond and in Ashland, "and in the regions round about Jordan."

Thus Benedict narrows the list of those who ought to marry to a Spartan band, and he has left out of the count moral causes for rejection which should have even greater weight than the physical and sentimental ones he has cumerated. Hastbe brutal fellow who maltreats his horse or his dog, the selfish creature who thinks only of his comfort, of his own indulgences, have such as these a right to enter the holy ordinance? Or the foul, impure debauche, what right has he to drag down to his level an innocent, loving woman? Ah! Benedict, how we might lengthen this list of exceptions, which, added to your own, would indeed make marriage a luxury only for the elect.

The greatest danger to truth is the tenderer to generalize from a few examples.

own, would indeed make marriage a luxury only for the elect.

The greatest danger to truth is the tendency to generalize from a few examples and thus claim proof of a universal law, And I fear my worthy friend has done this. He has been fortunate above his fellows, and from his own exceptionally happy lot he concludes that marriage is the "Open-Sesame" to social beatitude, and with the warm enthusiasm of one who loves his fellows, and cries to the madding crowd: "Come, and I will show you the way to happiness! "Tis just around the corner, in the clerk's office of the Hustings Court. For one dollary you can get your heense. Marry, and Heaven dawns upon you." Alas! if my friend will remember that there are records in many courts of our land with entries like this: "Darby 12, Joan—Decree for Divorce," it may cause him to stop and consider if he isn't a little too insistent in his plea for matrimony.

Aside from all personal considerations it.

sider if he isn't a little too insistent in his plea for matrimony.

Aside from all personal considerations it is in consonance with the higher culture and civilization of the age that marriage should no longer be regarded as indispensable for man cr woman. The heightened sense of individual responsibility, the broader grasp of economic relations, the clearer perception of cause and effect, the wider activities of life, that distinguish this age, all are fatal to indiscriminate In the increased avenues of bread-win-

In the increased avenues of bread-win-ning opened to woman, in the breaking down of the barriers to her development which heary custom has so long kept up, in the self-reliance her changed condition engenders, we plainly see that woman is no longer dependent upon marital connec-tion with man either for her happiness or tion with man either for her happiness or her support. Marriage for her is gradually becoming far more a question of judicious volition than of social necessity, and, sel-fish bachelor though I be. I would hail with delight the day when no woman's life shall be broken on the rack of uncon-genial marriage, and when women shall be united only to men worthy of them. I am fully aware, however, that this would mean a tremendous increase in the number of bachelors, and would possibly, from Renedict's standpoint, threaten Virginia's of bachelors, and would possibly, from Benedict's standpoint, threaten Virginia's material advancement.

In his No. 7 the married man is unduly severe upon what he regards as woman's worst fault. He has no terms too harsh for the fibrt. Really, I am surprised to find such a depth of bitterness in my friend for co venisl a sin, if sin it be. He must be idealizing. I am sure he has never been a victim himself of woman's falseness, and probably the indignation he feels at the idea is due to what he has read in poetry or fiction, or to what he has been told by some writhing swain. Information gatherel from such sources naturally gives him an exaggerated idea of what is really a harmless mode of recreation; indeed, I am inclined to believe a of what is really a harmless mode of recreation; indeed, I am inclined to believe a very wholesome exercise of the royal prerogative. Flirting is woman's art by which she develops man's vanity, and when he is sufficiently inflated she punctures him "with a bare bodkin," and code I he collapses. It is a salutary lesson, though of course the victim howls and makes a mighty pother. No compassion, however, need be wasted on him. He either recovers in due time or else he has the pleasing solace of a grievance for the rest of his existence.

expeditious work on the part of the jail officials in getting him out of the courtroom and behind the bars prevented the crowd from lynching him. The prisoner preserved the most uonchalant demeanor solace of a grievance for the rest of his existence.

Benedict promises us the history of a bachelor who said to him. "My life is a failure." All biography is interesting, and it has been truly said that the life of every man contains the elements of a deep tragedy. But I warn my good friend not to generalize. This bachelor's life might have been equally a failure had he had as many wives as the Grand Turk. "The fault, dear Brutus, is in ourselves, not in our stars that we are underlings." Few are the lives that have not been in some aspects failures, whether recognized or not as such by those who have lived them. Man is so prone to seek objective reasons for a wasted life, and amod its ruins 'tis balm to the wearied soul to believe the fault was not wholly his. To the mass it would yield a better comtort if at the end of a useless journey they would reflect that whichever path they might have taken at the parting of the ways they would have wished they had followed the other.

And so I reach the conclusion of this "great argument." Neither marriage nor celibacy are in themselves the cause of happiness or wee, but only incidental. Happy the man or woman who can say in either state with head uplifted.

"I am the master of my fate: r, and room and behind the bars prevented the crowd from lynching him. The prisoner deep preserved the most nonchalant demeanor throughout, both before and after his conviction. He refused to allow his attornost in most in the Governor for a stay of execution or commutation of sentence. He said that as he had been condemned to death he wanted the sentence carried out.

An Ugly Answer to Parnell.

By telegraph to the Dispatch.]

San Francisco. Cal., March 14.—In the gight betweed Jake Kilrain and George Godfrey last night the most notable feature was the ability of the negro to stand punishment. Beginning with the sixteenth round Kilrain again and again raised a succession of stunning blows on his head, neck, and face, but the black fellow took it all in the best-natured manner possible and came up smiling after each round. Had Kilrain pushed his advantage he could probably have knocked his opponent out much sooner than he did, but he apparently felt sure of the result and accordingly proposed to give the spectators a good show for their money.

In the forty-fourth round, however, Killain, woke up and began his long two-handed drives for the head, speedily rendering Godfrey grogy. The latter stood feebly against the ropes, unable to do anything and taking whatever punishment Kilrain fiad the strength to administer. The blows, indeed, were little more than pushes, but they served their purpose. An Ugly Answer to Parnell.

Joseph John Killion (Jake Kilrain) was born of Irish parents Pebruary 2, 1859, in Greenpoint, N.Y. His first notable victory was over the man he met to-might, George Godfrey, who was then thought a match for John L. Sullivan. That fight occurred in 1883 at the Boston Crib Club. It made Kilrain's reputation. He continued to succeed in the ring, and in 1885 removed to Baltimore. By the forfeiture of John L. George Godfrey, the champion colored heavy-weight of America, was born at Prince Edward Island, March 29, 1853, and is consequently thirty-eight years old. He stands 5 feet 10½ inches high, and when in condition weighs about 170 pounds. His first fight of any consequence was with Ham Williams, in 1852, when he won in seven minutes. He next defeated Protessor Hadley, the colored puglist, in four rounds. In 1884 he whipped Jimmy Doherty in one round. Jake Kilrain was referee in this fight. After a short time he sparred with McHenry Johnson, the Black Star, and when the police interfered Godfrey had the best of it. He fought draws with John Doherty and Joe Lannon, in both of which, it is said, he was unfairly treated by white referees. Lannon was virtually whipped.

Godfrey was beaten by McHenry Johnson in 1883 at Denver, Col., in four rounds. How it leaught none could divine, but it reached from the ground through the second and third stories and cut off the few rooms beyond it. The alarm was given, and the 400 inmates of the institution were thrown into wild commotion. Two neighbors in that town own rams. One of the rams numped over the fence into the field of the neighbor and while there injured one of the cattle which was grazing in the field. The neighbor caught the ram and tied him in the barn where his own ram was tied.

As he happened to give him too much slack rope the ram got at the more securely tied ram belonging to the man who had tied him and killed him. Washington, March 14.—The party of congressmen, military men, and newspaper correspondents who have been visiting Chattanooga and its old battle-field environs during the week, returned to Washington this morning delighted with their trip. They were everywhere received warmly and hospitably. The many evidences of industrial prosperity were a surprise to nearly all the visitors, and an exceptionally good opportunity was afforded to obtain an intelligent understanding of the great battles through the admirable explanations of General Boynton, Colonel Kellogg, Major Davis, General Fullerton, and others who participated in the battles and have since made them a careful study.

Before leaving the cars, through a committee consisting of Senator Hawley, Hon. J. G. Cannon, and Major John M. It is in creamy-white serge, made with a short jacket, cut away at the waist, within which appears a waistcoat of the same fabric, fastened down the front with plain gold buttons, which reippear in a larger size upon the coat. The coat is fashioned with large flat lapels, giving it even more distinctly the aspect of the orthodox sailor-suit. The skirt is a plain four can. PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 14.—Engine 393 and six cars on the second section of train No. 74. Philadelphia and Reading road, was wrecked last night about 9:30 near Beaver Valley, nine miles from Catawissa. The engineer, John Fisher, and Fireman James Wood were killed and Brakeman Clinton Harder had his leg broken.

The accident was caused by the cowcatcher of the engine striking a brakebeam which had fallen from a preceding train and lay upon the track, where it was caught between the main track and switchrail. Being on the princesse design, the waist attains a fashionable but scarcely natural length. The gown is trimmed with cream-colored embroidery, covering the front from neck to waist, furnishing the cuffs, together with a deep flounce upon the skirt.

A few days ago the National Council of Women of the United States held its con-vention at Washington and transacted some rather important business—to wit: passed the following resolution, which I passed the following resolution, which I quote from the Sun:
"Resolved, That the general officers shall appoint a committee of women whose duty it shall be to report within a year suggestions for a business costume for women which shall meet the demands of health, comfort, and good taste."

The sentiment of this resolution rather savors of a voluntary resumption of effets sumptuary laws. "A business costume for women," therefore a uniform attire which shall announce for the wearer: Behold in me a business-woman! It is Formally Presented Again to Mint-

PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 14.—George G.
Merrick, of Denver, to-day again presented his now famous silver brick to Superintendent Bosbyshell, of the Mint, for coinage. This second presentation was made necessary by the death of Secretary Windom, it having been decided by the Attorney General that the suit must again be filed. Colonel Bosbyshell, as he did before, refused to receive the orick and gave WILL THEY WEAR IT?

Possibly the committee will not find any very trying difficulties in the way of adopting a costume. The difficulty will arise when it is endeavored to persuade the misguided business women to wear it. I imagine the only women in the world who ever wore a uniform happily are the body guard of his Majesty of Dahomey. As to inducing the Business-Woman (mark the capitals) to adopt a distinctive dress it would be as wise to attempt to induce our great bankers to wear red trousers, our wealthy merchants to assume blue coats, or our prosperous politicians to make their station in life evident by the wearing of purple togas. The business-woman, after all, is not, cannot be separated from the rest of her sex—to ask her to forego the dearest privilege of the sex, the privilege of dressing herself according to her own sweet will—is nothing short of barbarous.

SACRAMENTO, CAL., March 14.—The ballot for United States senator to-day, being the fourth ballot taken by the Legislature in joint convention, resulted: Estee, 34; BUTTONS OF ALL KINDS. Although many if not most of the new dresses continue to be fastened invisibly in odd places and with the subtle, unobtrusive hook-and-eye, yet buttons are to be no longer neglected. We may no longer employ them for useful purposes. The Democrats cast their complimentary yote for William D. English, a number of the members of the Legislature being abornament. Gold and silver buttons are becoming plentiful, and on some new gowns are used recklessly.

Washington, D. C., March 14.—A delegation of the leading colored citizens of Washington, headed by Auditor Lynch and ex-Senator Bruce, waited on the President to-day and protested against the recent order of Brigadier-General Ordway, of the District National Guard, mustering out two battalions of colored troops because of the action of Congressa in reducing the appropriation for the District Guard. The President said that he would see that the necessary reduction of expenses was not made on the color-line, and that the order should be changed so as to protect the interests of the colored troops. as to protect the interests of the colored troops.

The President further said that the colored contingent would not be asked to bear the deficiency in the appropriation. It might be necessary for them to consolidate their two battalions into one to save expenses. He said that he knew nothing of the issue of General Ordway's order disbanding their organizations, and when it was shown to him by the delegation he expressed surprise and remarked that he knew nothing of it and promised to examine into the matter.

Later in the afternoon General Ordway was sent for by the President, and as a resto to be consolidated as indicated by the President. The colored people in Washington are gratified at the result of the President's action, which tends to allay the feeling engendered at the indignation meetings. Sr. Louis, Mo., March 14.—The sudden and mysterious disappearance of Colonel L. L. Washinoton, March 14.—The Spanish Minister in Washington to-day received a cable dispatch from the Captain-General of Cuba declaring that there are no signs of revolution or disorderly outbreak of any kind upon the island.

Acting-Secretary Grant has detailed Lieutenant Fowhatan H. Clark, of the Tenth cavalry, to special duty with the Second Westphalian Hussars, No. 11, of the Imperial German army, for the purpose of studying the German cavalry service. The detail is made by invitation of the German Government. Lieutenant Clark has made a study of the cavalry branch of the service, and is regarded as specially fitted for the duty assigned him.

The Washington and Georgetown Street Railway Company is in a dilerana. The company has purchased a valrable block in the heart of the city and is about to erect a power-house at a cost of over half a million dellars to fit the road out with cable-power. It now appears that the city water-mains cannot supply the 2,000,000 gallons of water necessary each day to operate the engines, and the commissioners have decided that they cannot grant a permit to lay a supply-pipe to connect the house with the river.

widening very slowly, and hopes are entertained that the ends will be fastened, and thus prevent further caving. It was rumored on the Cotton Exchange this morning that in all probability the levee had been cut by some discharged hands. Otherwise there is no accounting for the disaster.
